

HOME SECURITY LIGHTING

Home security lighting provides peace of mind

There are many ways to increase the security of your house. Burglar bars provide safety through straightforward strength, but is not always aesthetically pleasing. Modern technology offer many solutions – some of them extremely advanced, but often also with a hefty price tag. On the other hand, home security lighting is a very effective and economic way to improve the safety of your house. Well-lit areas are a proven deterrent for criminals, and by eliminating dark corners in your yard, you can prevent your house from becoming a target.

There are a few key areas to consider when planning your outside lighting. Front and back doors are the most obvious. You will also have the added benefit of being able to see who is at your door, and have the simple convenience of having the keyhole lit when coming home in the dark. It is also wise to have the areas around ground-floor windows lit.

Lighting your walkways offers you various benefits. It lessens the chance of someone approaching the house unnoticed, you don't have to walk through dark shadows when coming home late and it lights the path, helping you to avoid obstacles or uneven walking surfaces. Another area of importance includes vulnerable areas around your garage.

Give careful consideration to the type of home security lighting you install, however, and where you place it. Harsh floodlights can actually deepen the shadows in dark corners, and bother neighbours. The light should provide the minimum level of illumination required to light your property.

Also consider lights that have a back-up battery in case of power failures, especially when you are not at home. Timers provide you a lighting system that switches on and off automatically, creating the impression that someone is at home at all times. Remote controls can allow you to switch lights on and off from the safety of your car, and nowadays even modems are available that allow you to control the lighting of your home by phone, wherever you are.

We provides home security lighting systems that can do all of this while being extremely energy efficient. Visit the professionals at ambiente.co.za to find out how you can install some peace of mind at your house.
